Death benefit distributions are changing

Your super doesn't automatically become part of your estate when you die. Super funds must follow super laws and their Trust Deed to decide who receives your death benefit payment (made up of your super and any insurance benefit you might have).

We're making changes to our Trust Deed to simplify how your death benefit will be paid if you die and haven't nominated any beneficiaries. The Trust Deed is a legal document that sets out the rules for how a super fund must operate, including what we do with your super and any insurance you may have if you die.

What happens if you haven't made any death benefit nomination?

Until 30 November 2025

If you have not made any kind of death benefit nomination and we are notified on or before 30 November 2025 that you have died, then we must consider all eligible potential beneficiaries and decide who to pay and in what proportions.

On or after 1 December 2025

If you have not made any kind of death benefit nomination and we are notified on or after 1 December 2025 that you have died, your death benefit will be paid to either your spouse, your children or your estate in the following order of priority:

- If you have a surviving current spouse – we'll pay your entire benefit to your surviving current spouse (including same-sex, married or de facto).
- If you don't have a surviving current spouse – your benefit will be divided equally among your surviving children (including adopted and outside of marriage).
- If you don't have a surviving current spouse or any surviving children – your benefit will be paid to your estate.

In special circumstances, where we're not able to pay your death benefit to your estate, your death benefit may be transferred to the ATO.

What happens if you make a death benefit nomination?

We currently offer you the choice of making a binding death benefit nomination that lasts for three years or a non-binding death benefit nomination.

If you make a valid binding death benefit nomination (that has not expired), when you die, we'll pay your death benefit to the person or people you've nominated (provided they're eligible) in the proportions that you nominated.

If you make a non-binding death benefit nomination, then we may take your preference into account but must still consider all eligible potential beneficiaries and we may decide to pay different people or pay in different proportions. This may mean it takes longer to pay out your super, which could be more stressful for your loved ones.

We are not changing how we treat either type of death benefit nomination. Find out more about both types of death benefit nominations at cbussuper.com.au/beneficiary.

Make things simple with a three-year binding death benefit nomination

To make sure your death benefit goes to the people you want it to go to, you should make a binding death benefit nomination – and keep it up to date.

Your binding death benefit nomination has to be renewed every three years, but you might want to update it sooner, like if you marry, divorce, or welcome a new child into your family.

You can make, change or cancel a binding death benefit nomination at any time. Download the Binding death benefit nomination form at cbussuper.com.au/binding or call us on 1300 361 784 and we'll post it to you.

Where to find out more

These changes will apply automatically from 1 December 2025. From 1 December 2025, you can read more about nominating beneficiaries, who you can nominate, frequently asked questions and case studies at cbussuper.com.au/beneficiary.
